Love's Sighing.

(B. Manchester, Va.) I am sitting, dreaming, dreaming, Sad and lonely sit I here Dreaming of those happy mem'ries Of days love when you were near.

To-night I've read your letters darling, Read them every one. Not a single line escaped me. Ere that pleasant task was done.

I have not a single treasure That I prize so highly dear, As these friendly, loving missives That now lie before me here.

Would you recall these from me? These links between the past and now Would you erase each written word; Recall each spoken vow.

Once did it seem my friend
That darkest clouds between us lay
And then anon peeps out
The sunlight of a brighter day. Why should it thus change? Just to be reversed sgain?
Why not when hopes were lost,
Let hopelessness remain?

True love at first, true love at last, The first cold trust was deep-the scars Why heal that wound of wounds? But to open it again?

'Twere better had we never met, Could I recall those fleeting years, This simple, foolish heart of mine Would never know these falling tears

Alas! These years have faded fast, Recalled they cannot be; Their hopes and joys with those t Will mingle in eternity.

Then dream no more sad heart, Thy thoughts fain would I still, Nay turn thy thoughts upward And pray the Father's will.
